Course requirements

Students must have successfully completed the Preliminary course and be studying a HSC course in either Modern or Ancient History to attempt this course.

What will I be doing in the course?

The HSC History Extension Course provides students with an opportunity to gain greater knowledge and understanding of the ways history is constructed. Students will use historical debates and academic readings to investigate the question “What is history?” Students will consider the aims and purposes of history, how history is represented, and the reasons approaches to history have changed.

The readings and the case study will be selected from a variety of Ancient, Medieval, Modern and Australian sources. Possible case studies include: Appeasement, Ancient Egypt and the Life of Teti; Elizabeth 1 and the Elizabethan Age; The Crusades – Campaigns of the Cross; Napoleon – Reformer or Tyrant; The Nature of the Presidency of John Fitzgerald Kennedy, or the Witch Trials.

Students will then build on the skills they have developed in historical enquiry to design and conduct their own historical investigation in an area of personal interest. This investigation will explore an area of debate which draw upon their developing understanding of the issues that underpin historical questions.

What should I be able to do at the end of the course?

Students will be able to:

- Understand the ideas and processes of history
- Independently plan and conduct extensive research
- Use information technology to access, curate, and synthesise information
- Critically analyse and evaluate information from a variety of sources and perspectives
- Communicate information clearly through written and oral forms
- Appreciate the value of history for understanding the contemporary world.

How will this course help me in the future?

HSC History Extension will provide you with critical and reflective thinking skills that are essential for effective participation in work, higher learning and the broader community. In particular, the course will develop many higher order skills and methodologies that are of great value to students intending to undertake tertiary studies and are transferable between disciplines.
